

A net separates the two teams of six players in the team sport of volleyball. Under set rules, each side attempts to score points by putting the ball on the court of the other team. Since Tokyo 1964, it has been a part of the official Olympic Summer Games schedule.

- A rally is started when a player on one of the teams serves the ball from behind the back boundary line of the court, over the net, and into the opposing team's court.
- The receiving team must prevent the ball from touching the ground inside their own court. To return the ball to the other side of the court, a team may touch it up to three times.
- The winning side receives a point and gets to serve the ball to begin the subsequent rally.
